and that the White House had been so advised.

The Chairman stated that any Yugoslav recognition of East Germany would not come as a surprise to the intelligence community and the members exchanged views on the possible consequences of this move, particularly on the probable reactions of West Germany and various "uncommitted" countries. The Chairman suggested that this be regarded as a sensitive situation to be followed closely.

Mr. Cumming referred to recent developments in East Germany and noted that he considered this a sensitive, though not necessarily critical, situation. He and the members then exchanged views on this situation, especially with regard to the issuance of new currency and the possibility of other East German moves.
